ABOUT THE SYMPOSIUM

“Crimtorts” is a word coined by Professors Thomas Koenig and Michael Rustad to describe the expanding middle ground between criminal and tort law. Crimtorts is not a new body of law per se or even a new cause of action. Rather, crimtorts is an explicit recognition that criminal law principles of punishment and deterrence have been assimilated into tort law. The extent of that assimilation and its effects on the tort system are issues that merit robust consideration.

This symposium, the first national conference to focus on crimtorts, begins with an exploration, by Professor Kenneth Simons, of the traditional understanding of the distinction between criminal and tort law. Professors Koenig and Rustad will present and define the alternative paradigm of crimtorts. The concept of crimtorts can be applied to many areas of law. Our panelists, Professors Martha Chamallas, Mary Kate Kearney, Jeffrey O’Connell, and Byron Stier, will discuss four applications: civil rights concepts in tort law, domestic violence, the reform of tort liability, and class actions. Finally, the focus turns to the quintessential crimtorts remedy, punitive damages. Punitive damages, a tort doctrine explicitly based on the twin criminal law rationales of punishment and deterrence, have recently been the subject of an intense national debate. Our panelists, Professors Mark Geistfeld, Keith Hylton, Sheila Scheuerman, Anthony Sebok, and Catherine Sharkey consider the functions and effects of this quasi-criminal cause of action.

“Crimtorts” features a distinguished group of legal academics that have gathered to discuss the meaning and applications of an important legal concept. Please plan to join us for this unique event.
