LAWYERING FOR GROUPS

CIVIL RIGHTS, MASS TORTS, AND EVERYTHING IN BETWEEN

Lawyers represent groups of claimants in many areas of law, from civil rights to securities to mass torts and beyond. Group representation—whether in or out of class actions—raises a host of ethical, practical, and theoretical questions:

- To whom does the lawyer owe loyalty—the group or its members?
- How does the lawyer ascertain the clients' objectives and priorities?
- Do the answers depend on the area of law, the nature of the representation, or the procedural posture of the claims?
- Do cause lawyers see these issues differently from other lawyers?

Friday, November 30, 2012
9:30–5:00 p.m.

Fordham Law School | Room 430 B/C
